

Make Room For Miracles In Your Life

Melissa Casas, M.A.

Are you asking for a miracle in your life? Are you making room for your miracle?

When we ask for a miracle, we also need to remember to do our part to make room for the miracle in our lives. Making room for a miracle may sound a bit unnecessary, because isn't it the nature of a miracle to break through any barrier in order to come to us? But what about the barriers we've placed in our minds? Many of us ask for miracles at a breaking point, when we can no longer see our way through a situation and we've exhausted our thoughts about how to solve the problem ourselves. We often say, "It would take a miracle to solve this!" when we really don't believe a miracle is possible at all. Too often we are both asking for a miracle and telling ourselves how impossible it would be to receive what we're asking for!

But what if miracles weren't in the realm of the impossible - - what if miracles were signs pointing to what is always possible if we would only open up our limited thinking to consider a far greater realm of possibility? Albert Einstein is quoted as saying "The significant problems we have cannot be solved at the same level of thinking with which we created them." Using a regular practice to empty our minds of all the judgments, assumptions and stories about "how" a miracle could, should, and would happen keeps us out of the same mindset of the problem and into a whole new level of thinking, believing and expecting great things to happen to us. We need to remember to make our minds a clean, clear vessel through which possibilities flow into realities!

The first step in making room for a miracle is to realize that whatever difficulty we are experiencing, we are probably only seeing a very small piece of the picture. It is easy to think, "I can see everything about this and there's just no way out!", but that's only because we believe that we can see all there is to know. Imagine that you have 10 pieces of a 100 piece puzzle, except you don't know there are another 90 pieces, and so you believe that your 10 pieces are the entire puzzle. So you keep pushing around and pushing around those 10 pieces, trying to see the picture, while all along there are another 90 pieces waiting to come into your awareness. In order to access more pieces of the puzzle in any situation, practice saying, "This is what I know so far, and I am open to knowing so much more."

The second step in making room for a miracle is to ask for what you want with a sincere heart and in simple, clear terms, while imagining and feeling what your life is like now that your miracle has happened. It is through the power of belief that we move from hoping we will receive what we have asked for, to knowing the universe is conspiring to support us in greater ways than we could ever know from our 10-piece perspective!

And the third step in making room for a miracle is to release all assumptions about how your miracle will happen. To assume the path of a miracle is to create a small stream for an ocean to flow! Keep your mind clean and clear and in a state of open awareness. Believe in the unconditionally loving and creative power of the universe and release whatever beliefs that encourage you to entertain doubt. Connect with the essence of your miracle, connect with the feeling your miracle will give you, and trust that your desire, whatever it may be, however big or small, has been heard and is already being answered in the most extraordinary ways.

May you always recognize the miracles that are overflowing in your life every day!
